HEALTH RIGHT ACROSS THE MEDITERRANEAN: TACKLING INEQUALITIES AND BUILDING CAPACITIES

A multidisciplinary workshop

April 6th, 2017 • Aula Meridiana, Università di Genova – Via Balbi 5, piano II

"Health promotion is the process of enabling people to increase control over, and to improve, their health" (First International Conference on Health Promotion, Ottawa, 1986). That is, after the fundamental definition given by the World Health Organisation (1948), health is currently recognised as the result of a process, which starts with the common constitutional and social determinants and continues along a path of awareness and empowerment.

To date, the Mediterranean is a field for conflicts and tragedies connected with the stream of refugees from Africa and Middle East. The differences in culture, religion, heritage, far from being a source of growth, are cause of conflict. Though the principle of health right is repeatedly stated, the presence of striking inequalities in health status, healthcare and health promotion is dramatically apparent.

The workshop will focus on one key question: what are the key actions to tackle health inequalities and improve health for people living on or moving across the Mediterranean?

We aim to discuss the local and current situation with regard to health and healthcare in the Mediterranean area, by applying the lenses of global health and public health.

The event is part of the programme offered by the University of Genova as Regional Action Centre for Italy of the International Year of Global Understanding [www.global-understanding.info].
